Duke University School of Nursing	The Center for Latino Adolescent and Family Health (CLAFH) at Duke University is a research center that develops, evaluates, and disseminates family-based interventions designed to reduce multilevel access barriers to healthcare services and to improve treatment outcomes for diverse Latinx communities, including gay, bisexual, and transgender men at risk of or living with HIV. The Center's primary focus is the reduction of sexual and reproductive health disparities in Latinx communities, in particular HIV, sexually transmitted infections (STIs), unplanned pregnancies. CLAFH is a national leader in exploring and addressing the impact of HIV among Latinx in the United States and the Center's work on HIV seeks to: (1) raise awareness for historic and widening HIV disparities among Latinx in the United States; (2) identify and address the underlying drivers of increasing new HIV infections among Latinx, particularly among gay, bisexual, and transgender men; (3) promote the reduction of HIV-related stigma and the adoption of culturally appropriate and affirming HIV care that improves engagement in HIV treatment as well as treatment outcomes; and (4) build a broad coalition of collaborators for elevating Latinx as a key population in the fight against HIV/AIDS, including community members and advocates, researchers, applied public health professionals, the private sector, and key-decision makers at all levels of government. CLAFH has strong organizational partnerships with Latinx-led organizations in HIV services and advocacy across the United States, including Bienestar (California), Coaf Inc (Puerto Rico), the Valley AIDS Council (Texas), the National Hispanic Medical Association (D.C.), and the Latino Commission on AIDS (New York). CLAFH is housed within Duke University in North-Carolina, a top-tier research and educational institution. Duke University offers CLAFH world-class infrastructure of cutting-edge technology, including tools to deliver remote educational materials and methods for administering and assessing virtual activities. The Center's leadership role in confronting the U.S. HIV epidemic among Latinx communities, coupled with the educational infrastructure at Duke University, uniquely positions CLAFH to develop a pipeline for future Latinx leaders in HIV/AIDS and to significantly contribute to the overall aims of the ViiV Positive Action for Latinx Men: An Initiative for Gay, Bisexual, and Trans Men 2020 Request for Proposals.	$100,000	3.59%	www.clafh.org
